Beason & Nalley provides litigation professionals with valuation backgrounds to offer premium expertise and unrivaled knowledge of business value and what drives it. Often in litigation related areas, the fundamental role of the valuation practitioner is to determine the value of intangible assets held by businesses or individuals. The nature of this activity is extremely complex, but our seasoned consultants are uniquely positioned to leverage their expertise in a strategic manner. As a litigation team member, the valuation consultant can assist in trial preparation in a number of ways:

- Drafting and answering requests for documents and interrogatories related to the financial and technical issues

- Monitoring, evaluating and controlling documents produced during discovery
- Responding to the soundness of opinions of an opposing expert
- Evaluating expert witness testimony and work product
- Participating in the development of the overall case strategy
- Helping to define the scope of damages
- Assisting in compiling numeric summaries for inclusion in briefs, pleadings or motions
- Offering expert testimony in discovery or trial
- Developing strategically focused questions for direct and cross-examination
- Preparing a trial (exhibit) notebook
- Preparing visual aids

While all of the above activities may not be required in a given legal situation, the primary role of our litigation consultant is to help identify financial and economic issues and to develop the most effective approach to address them.

The complexity of today's litigation environment demands the competent, qualified expert your Beason & Nalley litigation consultant provides. Contact us for more information.
